My home is special to me because I share it with my family.

Henry heaved open the heavy metal door to an abandoned observatory. Dressed in a fine silk waistcoat and smart coal black trousers, he looked as if he was going on a date. He gazed down towards his hand stitched mechanical teddy companion, which was stood next to him, as it needed winding up for the tenth time that day. Henry was confused how his father's observatory got in such a state. Being here reminded him of his childhood. Goose bumps appeared over his lanky body as he relived old memories. His eyes let a tear or two out.

'To create a Rainforest in a shoebox'

Henry pushed open the door of the old abandoned tower. His skinny stick figure legs on his polished black shoes when clonk clonk clonk on the hard marble floor. His clockwork companion tugged on his long thin arm as they looked around the dark creepy room. The man looked like his was dressed to impress in his black velvet waistcoat and his long grey trousers. Henry noticed a pocket watch on the floor he looked in it and a smile grew on his face
